NEW YORK, October 31 /PRNewswire/ - Netpresenter's (http://www.netpresenter.com) enterprise software suite for visual communications, now can use Microsoft SharePoint content. This allows web managers to actively show SharePoint content as an interactive screensaver, (desktop) presentation or emergency alert pop-up on any screen, ranging from office PCs to kiosks and digital signage screens.

"Instead of hoping employees will visit the intranet, web managers can now actively bring the news headlines to the staff's attention using any available screen in the organization - whether it's their office PCs, kiosks or digital signage screens. In addition, they can use the same channel to reach all with a visual alert in case of an emergency," says Frank Hoen, CEO of Netpresenter. "This is true cross media publishing, but from a single source: Microsoft SharePoint."

"SharePoint, Microsoft's portal-based collaboration and document management platform, is increasingly becoming the standard for corporate content, document and groupware applications. While it is crucial for organizations to ensure all their documents, internet and intranet sites and other content, can easily be searched, managed and accessed, it should not end there. Some information is too important to wait for someone to come and have a look at it. It has to be seen by all employees immediately. By combining SharePoint and Netpresenter, organizations can reach employees anywhere, anytime. It offers a SharePoint linked emergency alert system, desktop news player, interactive screensaver and digital signage system all rolled into one," Hoen concludes.

Key features of the Netpresenter software with added SharePoint functionality are:

- Integrated emergency alert system, desktop news player, interactive screensaver and digital signage system;
- Robust, low bandwidth 350Kb Windows client application; - Integrates with SharePoint via RSS/XML feeds; - Specifically designed for use on corporate networks; - Allows for targeting and scheduling of content; - The software is easy to manage by corporate IT as the same software is used for both desktop and digital signage environments.
